

Sexy Secrets: Sex Survey 2008

DECEMBER 1, 2008

INDIA TODAY's sixth sex survey shows a more sexually carnivorous urban Indian willing to break taboos, batter boundaries and pushing the limits of fantasy. But the appetite is clearly greater than the menu.

“With sexual passions coming audaciously out of the closet, one hopes that sexual crimes in our country will eventually come to an end.”

Basic Instincts

Your cover story (“Sexy Secrets: Sex Survey 2008”, December 1) reveals emerging trends in the urban Indian psyche. It shows nothing is taboo anymore and almost everything is open and available. Both INDIA TODAY and AC Nielsen-ORG MARG have brought out hard-hitting revelations. It’s a job well done. But there are a few questions that are still haunting us—where are we heading with these trends and what will be the ultimate result of such trends?

The revelations made by the respondents in the sex survey may not depict the full instincts of the urban society but indubitably reflect the psyche of the

An Eye for an Eye

L.K. Advani has rightly advocated a judicial probe into the ATS interrogation of Sadhvi Pragya Singh Thakur (“Hardselling Terror”, December 1). But is it fair to conduct narco tests on a lady repeatedly just because investigators cannot find evidence against her? Perhaps such inhumanity was possible only because she belongs to a majority community in a country dominated by a pseudo-secular mindset.

My family and I have been patrons of INDIA TODAY for a long time. But these successive sex surveys are an unnecessary indulgence for a frontrunning magazine like yours. Since the magazine is primarily read by people who are past their prime and look for information and news, such sex surveys can be quite embarrassing. As readers, we begin to wonder if knowing what position people experiment in their private lives is more important than laying emphasis on more pressing and intellectually stimulating issues.
