

Born in Pakistan

Nine out of the 10 LeT terrorists who attacked Mumbai were from Pakistan's Punjab province.

CST Attackers

ISMAIL KHAN

The group leader and an LeT veteran, hailed from Dera Ismail Khan, NWFP. The only one who wasn't from the Punjab province.

AJMAL AMIR KASAB

From Okara, Pakistan, he attacked CST, Metro junction, Nariman Point and Girgaum Chowpatty before being caught here

ABDUL REHMAN
From Multan district, Pakistan

ABU ALI
From Okara, Pakistan

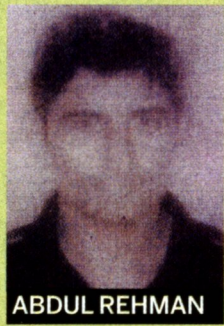

ABU SHOAIB
From Sialkot, Pakistan

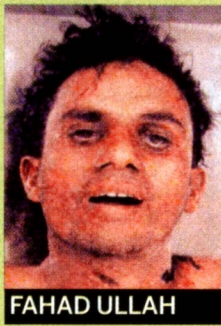

ABU UMER
From Faisalabad, Pakistan

TRIDENT HOTEL Attackers

ABDUL REHMAN
From Multan, Pakistan

FAHAD ULLAH
From Okara, Pakistan

NARIMAN HOUSE Attackers

ABU AKSHA
From Multan, Pakistan

ABU UMAR
From Faisalabad, Pakistan

WESTERN TARGETS

The first LeT operation specifically targeting Americans and British nationals gave the attacks a global dimension.

The bulk of the coordination for the attack was done from the LeT's operational headquarters called Baitul Mujahideen located far from the public eye at Shawai Nala, a small town on the outskirts of Muzaffarabad, the capital of POK. These headquarters located at the sylvan foothills of the Himalayas, comprising a three-storeyed building, masjid, hostels and an arms and ammunition storehouse, is where investigators believe the Mumbai mayhem was most likely hatched. The Lashkar brass, including its 'Amir' Saeed, who live in ISI safehouses in various cities around Pakistan and travel in heavily armed cavalcades of SUVs which would make Indian politicians blush, kept in constant touch with each other through Thuraya satellite phones. Rahman was constantly in touch with their cadres through voip cell phones even as they were engaged in ferocious gunbattles with security personnel in Mumbai.

Over the years there has been increasing evidence that the LeT may be aspiring for a global profile. "LeT is a dangerous al-Qaeda affiliate that has demonstrated its willingness to murder innocent civilians," said Stuart Levey, Under Secretary for Terrorism and Financial Intelligence said, rather prophetically in May this year. "LeT's transnational nature makes it