Flash from the Past

From shadowy glimpses of life in a home to Bollywood divas and romance, this photographic exhibition throws up an interesting blend of subjects

◀ Portrait of a Movie Star—Rekha
Ketaki Sheth's work is from 1987, silver gelatin print on archival paper. The black and white image conveys not only Rekha's poise but also that the moment could have been captured only by someone who is keenly acquainted with her work.

◀ Phantom Lady or Kismet: A photo-romance
Pushpamala N.'s work is often described as performance photography because the artist uses herself as a model. In her 1996-98 series, she plays the Bollywood diva Nadia, and also doubles up as her femme fatale younger sister. Pushpamala uses elements of popular culture in her art to explore place, gender and history.

▶ Bedroom of Wendell Rodricks
Through his work, Goa-based photographer Prabuddha Dasgupta shows the transient nature of time. With the ever-changing play of light and dark, the room can never look the same.

On till August 8, at Mumbai's Bodhi Art Gallery.

PHOTOGRAPH BY ANNA FOX

Tasveer in collaboration with British Council presents Face Up, a show by photographers Anna Fox and Sunil Gupta. Both Fox and Gupta have made considerable inroads into the world of documentary and art photography in the international arena. Face Up explores the relationship they have both developed to the photograph as a portrait. Both photographers are known to work "from the starting point of the personal and private. Their work questions past representations and raises new questions concerned with race, gender and identity," says a spokesperson. The stark

ART EXHIBITION

Holding UP

What 'SOAK-Mumbai in an Estuary' is an effort borne out of the 2005 floods in Mumbai. The artists aim to transform the city's terrain with concrete plans to prevent flooding. An exhibition displaying Mumbai in a fluid threshold that encourages the construction of elements to hold monsoon water instead of letting them into the sea.

Who Anuradha Mathur and Dilip da Cunha, teachers at the School of Design, University of Pennsylvania, have focused their design expertise on cultural and ecological issues of contentious landscapes.

WORKS ON DISPLAY

Why "We worked very hard to present it as a public exhibition so that we can open this debate to the city's stakeholders," says Kavita Khanna, director of SOAK. On display at the National Gallery of Modern Art, Mumbai, till August 23.

photographs shot to reveal untold stories by both artists tell tales that go beyond the frame. The event will include a talk with both Fox and Gupta besides a film screening based on their work. Gupta has curated the first show excavating a history of photography from India, Pakistan and Bangladesh for the Whitechapel Gallery in London, set to open in 2010. Both are also involved in the development of a postgraduate degree in photography for National Institute of Design, Ahmedabad. On from July 18 to August 10 at Tasveer, Bangalore.
