ISHI KHOSLA, NUTRITIONIST

Now, everyone is far more aware about the kinds of food that is right for them. The concept of organic food didn't exist earlier, but I can see the shift now. People are more aware of heart disease, immunity, diabetes and cancer. Plus, we tend to borrow from western trends. While the majority still eats unhealthy, this is changing rapidly. Maintain a food diary, and compare your diet with these requirements. If there are gaps, you need to make changes. The results are enough motivation.

AMBRISH MITHAL, ENDOCRINOLOGIST

The health of our bones is just going downhill. The problem is, we don't get enough Vitamin D, which is essential for absorbing calcium in our body. The main source of Vitamin D is the sun. But most of us need an airconditioned environment 24x7, and junk food is the order of the day. The fallout is brittle bones as well as diabetes. Until we do something about our habits, which result in such lifestyle diseases, things may spiral into something big.
