

RAJEEV GOWDA 45
PROFESSOR, IIM, Bangalore

MILES AHEAD

He's the cool professor in touch with the times. He tells his students they can stage a play, or submit a handycam movie, instead of writing a 2,000-word project. Gowda, who teaches various aspects of public policy and management, has a keen interest in politics and a vision for transforming Bangalore. After a teaching stint at the University of Oklahoma, the John M. Olin Post-doctoral Fellow in Law & Economics, University of California, Berkeley, came to India with a dream. "My exposure to American education opened my eyes. It makes you do things you weren't sure you were capable of," he says. He wants to replicate that in Indian management education.

SANJAY RAMCHANDRAN

"Rajeev is a unique intersection of public policy theory and practice."

Manish Sabharwal, CEO, Teamlease

by Swagata Sen

Usually to be found
Either on the IIM-B campus or at his personal office on Church Street.

Mantra for change
"Be alert, be alive. We should also keep learning forever."

Loves Quizzing. He was the runner-up in the BBC Mastermind contest in 2002.

A senior lecturer at the District Institute of Education and Training (DIET), Tiruchirappalli, Sivaprakasam Sivakumar could have become just another victim of government apathy. Instead, starting in 1999, he started a project by the name of School Improvement Programme (SIP), radically improving the academic standards of 95 schools of Lalgudi union in the district. In 2002, he started an innovative teaching practice called The Street School programme after realising the problems faced by rural children. Managed by parents who pay a moderate monthly fee, an educated youngster, usually a woman called akka, helps children through home study. SIP also provides community breakfast, which is now available in 34 schools across Lalgudi. All this by travelling from village to village on a cycle, carrying his own food and water, inspiring teachers.

by Banumathi Krishnaswamy

Education M. Sc from Annamalai University and M. Ed from Ramakrishna Mission Vidyalaya, Coimbatore.

Public recognition
Got the 2004 NCERT award for creating an innovative learning experience for socially deprived children.

Mantra for change
Low cost, zero cost. He uses waste materials for preparing teaching aids.

own that local leadership can transform an impoverished system."

Institute of Technical Teachers' Training and Research, Chennai

Knowledge? Let everybody have it.

India, go to school with Luxor Stationery.

—Luxor—
STATIONERY

Buy online at www.luxor.in