NLSIU and NALSAR change places at the top only to prove their time-tested supremacy, while Amity Law School makes a comeback into the Top 10

| By Stephen David |

The National Law School of India University (NLSIU) just can't be kept down. It has emerged right on top in the survey this year. The National Academy of Legal Studies and Research University (NALSAR) of Hyderabad, which had broken the run of NLSIU in the prime position last year, is in second place this year, followed by the Faculty of Law, University of Delhi, in third place. Making it into the top 25 this year are also institutes like the School of Legal Studies of the Cochin University of Science and Technology at Kochi, the MS Ramaiah College of Law, Bangalore, and the Faculty of Law, Gujarat University, at Ahmedabad.

As NLSIU shines, it is not surprising why the top 50 rankers of the Common Law Admission Test (CLAT) congregate on this sprawling Nagarbhavi campus in Bangalore to partake of five years of comprehensive residential legal training. "The trimester system is unique for any law school in India, which means the students and faculty have to push the bar literally with-
