KAL KISSNE DEKHA

Don't Look Now

RATING ★☆☆☆☆

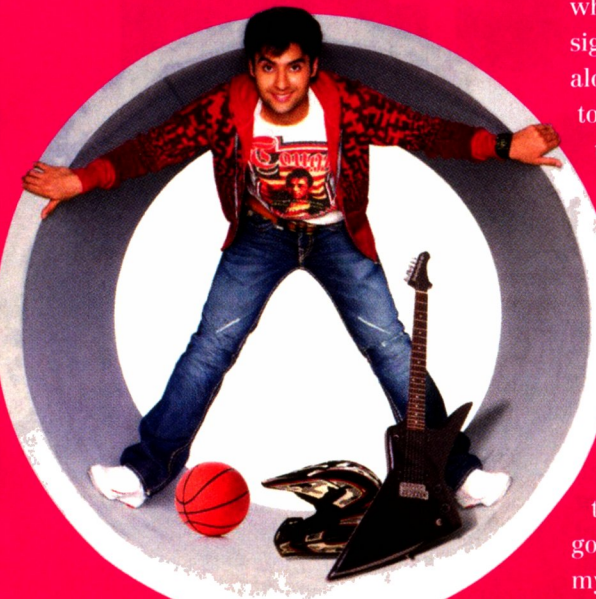

Director: Vivek Sharma

Starring: Jackky Bhagnani,
Vaishali Desai

Anyone, even a producer's son, who looks like Uday Chopra, the oldest newcomer in Bollywood, should rethink his profession. It is so with Jackky Bhagnani, who plays fresh-from-Chandigarh bumpkin to Vaishali Desai's trust fund princess in Kal Kissne Dekha. Ho hum. Desai stands atop a rock, swinging her chiffon-clad hips and tossing her 80s style big hair. Bhagnani responds standing atop a taller rock, arms akimbo, smile frozen. Just another love story set in a campus, where an assortment of ugly-by-design minor actors fill the gaps in dialogue? Even that would have been tolerable. Instead, Sharma decides to give the boy a superpower, that of seeing the future, wherein he can foretell a series of blasts that will rip Mumbai apart. What science student Bhagnani doesn't know is that his guru Rishi Kapoor is part of the conspiracy. If only for the crime of making Kapoor, Bollywood's most huggable teddy bear, wear a bad wig and a goofy grimace, this one doesn't get my vote. At all.

ART EXHIBITION

Clean up ACT

SOME OF UPADHYAY'S CREATIONS

Take a step towards a cleaner Mumbai and walk into Chintan Upadhyay's exhibition titled Khatti Mithi. Upadhyay uses various media, including sculptures, to reveal the condition of the Mithi River and the urgent attention it needs. He has creatively dipped his paintings into the Mithi water to capture the blackness, filth and stench that cannot be ignored. It is not the first time Upadhyay's art reflects ecological causes. Some of his current works were produced during a workshop held for underprivileged children growing up on the banks of the Mithi. He will also make a video presentation and a surprise live demonstration. From June 20 to July 5, at Sakshi Gallery, Mumbai.

ART EXHIBITION

Undying Devotion

In a fitting tribute to legendary artist K. G. Subramanyan on his 85th birthday, Aakriti Art Gallery, along with Akar Prakar and Seagull Art Foundation, is presenting an exhibition between June 20 and July 18 in Kolkata. The gallery's owner, Vikram Bachhawat, said, "Subramanyan has been an outstanding artist, teacher and art writer. A student of Nandalal Bose, he worked tirelessly to uphold the values of modernism inherited from the Santiniketan school. The restless energy, the untiring search of vocabularies, his sense of satire and paradox in the positioning of the figures all subscribe to the high modernist paradigm." The exhibition will display his works during 2007-08. They include 72 paper works, 21 reverse paintings on acrylic sheet and nine canvasses. The same day, four monograms will be released by artists Jogen Chowdhury, Sekhar Roy, Amitava Dhar and Sunil Dey. Bachhawat said Subramanyan embossed T-shirts and mousepads carrying digital prints of his works will be available at the new art shop.
