RE

of things which have been promised and how we will deal with these issues in future. As a culmination of that campaign we brought out a document that we presented to the prime minister. But as a follow up to that, we said we must have a board of distinguished people, who are experts, to keep focus on terror in the public domain. So we are able to look at it in terms of what the Government is doing, what it has done so far, what has it promised and what can be done. The big fear is what do we do when the next attack happens, how well are we equipped as this is a problem which is not going to go away.

Raj Chengappa: The theme of the board's first meeting is how India's response has been post-26/11 attacks, to evaluate the government's performance and to see what more should be done immediately.

Ved Marwah: The country focused on 26/11 not only because it was an audacious attempt, but for three days people across the world watched the utterly inadequate response of the Government and security agencies. The police and other agencies were responding as if they were shooting for a Bollywood film. The Mumbai Police did not take charge of the situation. Even the elementary step of briefing the media was hijacked by everyone and even the army and navy jumped into the fray, creating confusion. The decision of bringing in the NSG was taken by a chief minister sitting in Kerala. I am aware that the NSG is in 24-hour readiness with dedicated air power. Again, we hear that intelligence was available. If it was available, then why didn't somebody follow it up? There is
