“ Surgical strikes would have made sense within 10 hours of the attack, but we didn't know if Pakistan was behind it.

It is a shame that successive governments have surrendered such vast amounts of the defence budget.

The armed forces are not ready for war and we are lucky as no one has tested us recently.

There is no accountability in our security system. The NSA was at dinner when 26/11 was happening as he has no role.

The measures taken by the Government, like changing the home minister, are just cosmetic. **”

“ No media in any country has been as irresponsible. It was through TV that terrorists could see the operations.

The real masterminds like the Zarar Shahs and the Lakhvis are outside the scope and jurisdiction of our law.

The Home Ministry is yet to take the first step towards capacity building for fighting terror.

The masterminds of terror attacks need to be targeted in covert strikes along with the terrorist training camps.

Every step taken during the operation was wrong. Coordination at the policy level is missing and non-focussed. ” required within a long-term framework and ensure that every element of our policy and practice in the short-run reconciles with the strategic architecture of that long term framework. Stop cancelling out every advance that we make by immediate concessions thereafter. There must be a political solution. Force is a political solution. Whoever told you that democracy doesn't have any utility for force.

You cannot have effective counter-terrorism in the city if your police is third-rate. So either you augment the entire capacity of the security apparatus or nothing will work. You have to end the politics of collusion. I do not understand how Dawood Ibrahim can still have the largest underworld empire when he is leading a war against this country in collusion with Pakistan. And this cannot happen without direct political collusion at the highest levels.

Kiran Bedi: Why has the 1.3-million-strong police force not been co-opted in the war on terrorism? They are our eyes and ears on the ground. The lone policeman who caught Kasab did what few courageous people could do. This is because there is no leadership which can inspire co-option, teamwork or stakeholdership.

No website with a direct line to the home minister has been opened for public to give information. The DGPs have been left out of the fight against terror because they are struggling for survival. Political interference is at the maximum and we have an enslaved police leadership, hierarchical and rigidly inaccessible.

No systemic corrections have been done since 26/11. No one in the Home Ministry has paid the price. We have incapacitated our police force. So while we handle Pakistan on external front, we have to handle our Pakistans in the internal front, sitting here sabotaging systemic change. The same secretariat way of functioning is never going to deliver.

Fighting terrorism has to be provided for. Anti-terrorist cells in every state have to be assured of funds, intelligence budgets and mobility. To in-
