

Moving House

Kal Penn has given up his surgical gloves on the American medical drama House and has taken on a new role, by the side of President Barack Obama. The White House has hired The Namesake actor as a liaison between Obama's administration and Asian-American and Pacific Islander communities. Penn told Entertainment Weekly, "I've always thought about moving into politics. My grandparents marched with Gandhi in the Indian Independence movement." He's finally acting on it.

"This time I've no stylist. I've got some tunics, jeans, skirts and dresses, which I have to put together."

Mandira Bedi, actor, on whether she will repeat her famous 'noodle straps' on Extra Innings.

SERVED STEAMY

Padma Lakshmi is cooking up quite a treat. But this time it's not as the host of Top Chef. The model, host and former wife of author Salman Rushdie has stripped down for the May issue of Allure magazine. The 38-year-old tells the glossy that she usually sleeps in the nude. "I think I look better now than I did in my 20s, because I'm more confident about my body." With that body, why wouldn't she be?

Fair Tale

Fashion fiend she might be, but after two flops Sonam Kapoor still needs to prove her box-office worth. That isn't stopping her from pocketing her first mega endorsement deal with L'Oreal Paris. Kapoor is the youngest ambassador of the brand that has on board names like Penelope Cruz, Scarlett Johansson and Aishwarya Rai Bachchan. There's been wild speculation about Bachchan not wanting to endorse the new whitening product range while others say the company wanted a younger face. It's time to pass on the baton.
