

The Milky Way

Mallika Sherawat now comes in a glass. Yes, that's right. The actor who's been in publicity overdrive while dubbing for Hisss in Los Angeles, now has a milkshake named after her at Millions of Milkshakes in West Hollywood. The shake is made of blueberries, raspberries, blackberries, strawberries and is topped with whipped cream. It seems, however, someone misinformed Sherawat. She showed up at the ice-cream parlour in a golden ghaghra-skirt with a matching sequined barely-there choli. It was a milkshake being made, sweetie. You didn't have to do any shaking yourself.

Beyond the Wall

Shruti Shibulal, daughter of Infosys CEO S.D. Shibulal, wants to taste success herself. The 24-year-old recently co-partnered her first venture, Caperberry, a Spanish restaurant, now the toast of Bangalore. "I love food. It's just that I never thought I'd open my restaurant before 40," says Shibulal, who gave up her job as an investment banker on Wall Street to chop, cut and churn. This one's certainly dishing it out.

"Indian dance is as much about emoting with the face and eyes as it is about body movements. Ten years of training has helped me in my acting career. It has taught me to express through my eyes."

Vidya Malavade, actor, on her first Kathak performance on stage after her film debut, a tribute to the late Madhurita Sarang

HOT STUFF

Anandita Dutta Tamuly likes to spice things up. The 26-year-old from Assam chomped on 51 Bhut Jolokia or ghost chillies, known to be the world's spiciest, to get into the Guinness Book of World Records. In two minutes, Tamuly gobbled up the chilli treat without shedding a single tear. British celebrity chef Gordon Ramsay, who was in Assam for the shoot of a TV show, supervised the feat and was left awestruck. Ramsay couldn't manage even one. Tamuly, who developed a penchant for chillies when she was a child, wants to now be known as the world's "hottest" woman. Looks like she has Ramsay's vote at least.

