MANAGERS WHO UNDERSTAND INTERNATIONAL WORK ETHICS ARE IN DEMAND

International Business Management

As the world shrinks into a global village, these managers who understand international work ethics are in great demand. A regular programme involves modules in international economics, trade, international banking, finance and human resource management. Courses in cross-cultural management and foreign languages are also offered.

Rural Management

This course prepares students to be managers who can build sustainable institutions for the benefit of the country's largely rural population. Not only do these managers have to engage with the society at grassroots level, they also have to stay attuned to the economic and political shifts that are occurring at a global level while paying attention to basic issues such as irrigation, electricity and other amenities in villages.
