

MUSIC

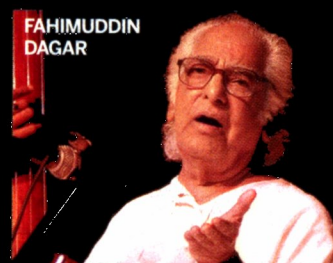

Notes of Revival

The oldest surviving form of classical music was lost but has now been found. The Dhrupad Samaroh is from September 9 to 11 at the India International Centre, Delhi.

WASIFUDDIN DAGAR

Dhrupad is the most ancient style of classical Hindustani music and India boasts of many legends. The word Dhrupad is derived from Dhruva, the steadfast evening star that moves through the galaxy, and 'pada', meaning poetry. It is a form of devotional music that traces its origin back to the ancient text of the Sam Veda. Now the old order is changing and allowing room for new voices. The Dhrupad Samaroh, starting from September 9 to 11, will feature music recitals, films and discussions like on whether liberalisation has affected this music form? On the first day, watch the film Dhrupad in the Times of Liberalisation directed by Arvind Sinha followed by a discussion, 'Past, Present and Future of Dhrupad', with Wasifuddin Dagar. On September 10, Generation Next will take centre-stage. S. Nafeesuddin and S. Aneesuddin Dagar will present a jugalbandi followed by a vocal recital by Harinath Jha. The surprise concert is Suvir Misra's, disciple of the Dhrupad maestro Ustad Zia Fariduddin Dagar and Nirmalaya Dey. He is one of the few left-hand practitioners of the veena family of Indian lutes who performs on three veenas from the Hindustani and the Carnatic tradition. The finale will be a recital by Ustad R. Fahimuddin Dagar.

IF YOU HAVE 30 MINUTES, spend it at the Gallery Threshold in Delhi viewing Rahul Kumar's creations of stoneware and ceramics. On till September 17.

DANCE

A New RHYTHM

Sometimes one gets the feeling that the children of celebrity parents living in the metros dominate the art scene. So when there is a young face from a place like Aurangabad, it draws instant attention. Kathak dancer Parwati Dutta's face is just one such face, who is a guru and the director of Mahagami Gurukul. A student of Guru Munnalal and Birju Maharaj, she will present some of her own creations like rhythmic dance to the beats of Pakhawaj. Inspired by the sculpture of Elora, she will interweave her insights into her dance.

Imaging Life

What 'Feeling Absence', featuring the latest works of photographer Shibu Arakkal. The series features a collection of black and white images that balance the fine line between photography and paintings. His works allow the viewer to gaze at every pore, laying bare textures and imperfections within beautiful creations. The textures make for very surreal imagery.

Who Arakkal brings nature to life, using film as his canvas. He calls this series his most personal work as it is centred around the birth of his daughter.

When and where Till October 17 at Caperberry in Bangalore.
