DYING TO ACT

She had us in tears as the little Anjali in Mani Ratnam's film, named after her character. Baby Shamili, who played the role of a mentally ill child with a fatal condition, is back as an adult. Just like Anjali, she's dying in this one too. In the Telugu film Oye!, the actor plays a terminally ill cancer patient. Now 22, Shamili plans to immerse herself in films but not before she's finished her master's degree in filmmaking from Singapore University. Glory Days

The honours keep pouring in for Gautam "Pocket Rocket" Gambhir at the end of a dream year. Not only did the Indian opener make runs by the bucketful in all forms of the game, but he has also just been ranked the No.1 Test batsman in the world on the International Cricket Council (icc) ranking list and is one of the Arjuna Awardees for sports this year, the only cricketer to find himself on that list. At which juncture, the 27-year-old left-hander nimbly scored a few diplomatic points, declaring that the award was far more precious to him than the icc's No.1 ranking. Not like certain teammates who decided that they couldn't bother to collect their Padma awards in person. Ahem. Mahi and Bhajji, have you been paying attention?

The only angle from which to solve a problem is the try-angle.
