

SCRIPTING SUCCESS WITH PANACHE

Young India is brimming with awe-inspiring stories of triumph. We bring to you some incredible young achievers who are out to make their presence felt India is the second fastest growing economy in the world, and providing it the much needed thrust is the generation next. The young brigade is extremely ambitious, ready to experiment and give shape to smart ideas.

Young entrepreneurs, who are in their early 20s and barely out of college, are running their own business with great success. Take the example of Divyank Turakhia, co-founder and director of Bombay-based Directi Group, who is just 24 and running his domain-name registration and site-building company successfully. He borrowed a little amount from his parents to start his company. And today he is a proud owner a profitable organisation with more than 250 employees and clients around the world.

Sasikanth Chemalamudi was one of the nominees in the young entrepreneurs contest run by a business weekly recently. He is CEO of Habits, a creative learning resources company. Having graduated from the Birla Institute of Technology & Science in Pilani, this 23-year-old had an opportunity to join the outsourcing powerhouse Infosys. But he had his eyes set on a bigger goal. He turned down the offer to pursue his passion for entrepreneurship. He co-launched Habits that encourages more creative thinking with the aid of educational materials such as musicals, plays, and interactive games. Not only that, the company is also involved with projects in rural India to encourage self-employment.

Story of Kaya Shewakramani, founder, Kreating Keepsakes Design Studio, is no different. What started as a hobby of scrap booking to preserve memory turned into a full-fledged business. Established in 2007, Kreating Keepsake Design Studio is one of its kind studio in India to create personalised photo collage and build memory album.

The IT sector in India is the major contributor in the GDP. Even its role in the world economy is crucial. The young generation is ensuring that the mettle of IT services is proved beyond any doubt. And that's why they have those innovative ideas always coming in. Rama Krishna Gaddipati of Tenali came up with one such innovative idea and launched a service called SchoolMATE, which is a comprehensive student analysis system that allows parents to monitor their child's progress at school. The service feeds information on conduct, examinations, and report cards to subscribers, and employs technology such as mobile text messaging, the Web, and e-mail. Gaddipati was also the winner of the Intel CyberFiesta National Software Development Contest in 2001. This 24-year old is co-founder of Bridle Information & Technology Solutions, a mobile applications and services outfit. The company has about 70,000 subscribers in Hyderabad and Vishakapatnam.

The list is endless. There are many young achiever who hail from small towns. However, this doesn't stop them from dreaming big. They may not be as famous as the Tatas, the Ambanis and the Birlas, but they have the zeal to excel and create a niche for themselves. With a fire in their belly, they are ready to take on the challenges head on, sending a clear message that future belongs to them.
