An Unequal COUNTRY

If we generate more public resources and use them with a better identification of the prevailing injustices, we could make a big change

— By AMARTYA SEN

India Tomorrow will not come about with just one magic bullet. The rapid economic growth of the past six years has been encouraging. While the economy was growing at the rate of about 5, 6, 7 or 8 per cent, the public revenue was growing at 7, 8, 9 or 10 per cent and sometimes even 11 or 12 per cent. This revenue could have been used for the removal of all social injustices. Even so, I don't think a free market can be associated with happiness. Indeed, scepticism in the market is far more widespread among the public than professional economists. And the scepticism is stronger now. I'm not anti-growth; I'm against
