

AFFORDABLE HOMES

For the millions of people in this country, housing is a basic necessity - borne out by the huge demand-supply gap in housing estimated at 24 million dwelling units. A burgeoning middle class with a high percentage of working age population, migration to cities, rapid urbanisation and breaking up of joint families into nuclear families are strong growth drivers. Tax breaks on interest and principal repayment on housing loans is also a major growth driver for this industry. Stabilised property prices, low interest rates and increased income levels of the population have increased the affordability from 20 times annual income in the mid 1990s to about 5 times annual income now.
