

On the Warpath

AUGUST 17, 2009

The Ambani versus Ambani sequel is about a gas contract, about justice, about political power, wealth of over Rs 50,000 crore and the obsession to be the biggest.

“The ambitions of the Ambani brothers are preventing them from competing constructively while the Government flip-flops thanks to the politician-businessman nexus. The nation will suffer.”

Gas Tragedy

The conflict between the Ambani brothers (“On the Warpath, August 17) has exposed the politics in the Government’s policymaking. Why else should it take one stance in the Bombay High Court and change it later when the matter has gone to the Supreme Court? From not challenging the MOU between the two brothers for gas supply to dubbing it “blatantly illegal” and appealing to the Supreme Court to declare it “null and void”, the Government has been inconsistent in its stand on the issue.

The Baloch Blunder

It will be a mistake to ignore the Great Game being played by the US and China in extending control over Balochistan (“In the Eye of Storm”, August 17). These countries want to gain access to the vast resources in Central Asia. The tragedy is that both Pakistan and India are failing to see the larger picture, with the former blaming India for its misery.

R.J. KHURANA, Bhopal

Since the Balochs are stridently demanding freedom, the international community must come together and look into the issue. It would help Balochs to develop their country and benefit from the natural resources it has. The UN must ask all the chieftains of the province to resolve the issue of secession through dialogue.

sets the Ambani spat apart is the role played by the UPA Government, more specifically, the Ministry of Petroleum and Natural Gas, in not only propping up Mukesh Ambani against Anil Ambani, but also facilitating what appears to be an unimaginable windfall profit for his RIL. The entire episode raises questions over the Government’s handling of the issue.

Fair Play

The reservations that have been cited by the players are unreasonable (“WADA Dabba Doo”, August 17). As responsible sportsmen at the pinnacle of their game, it is their duty to uphold the spirit of sportsmanship and set an example by unequivocally coming out against dop-
