

GIRLS WITH GRIT

There's brawn behind this beauty. A Bharat Kesari award winner, Sonika Malik is one of India's few women wrestlers. The Haryana girl will soon face her fears on Colors' Khatron Ke Khiladi 2. "Hopefully more women will take up wrestling after they see me on TV." That's the spirit.

Just two years ago, Archana Sardana was bedridden. Now, she's the founder of India's all-woman air-diving team. "I did 51 jumps and got my B licence from the U.S. Paratroopers Association," she says. The team will participate in the next World Air Games. Hope they emerge with flying colours.

GLOBAL TUNING

Singers Sona Mohapatra and Kailash Kher may have distinct styles but they are both known for their earthy tunes. National Geographic seems to have noticed too. The two have been profiled for the channel's world music series called The Music Nomad. The channel felt that Kher with his Sufi influence and Mohapatra with her Soft Rock embodied the essence of India with a modern twist. Who better than them to represent India on a global front?

HUE AND TRY

Photographer and designer Meenal Aggarwal is making her presence felt as the art director of the wildly hilarious Quick Gun Murugan. What started with designing understated looks for husband Rajat Kapoor's films, has grown into a full-blown style statement. "The film is completely over the top. We used all the primary colours," she says. The hero's brother's house is green, Mango Dolly's set is pink and the Cowboy saloon is a hybrid of a Wild West bar and an Udipi restaurant. As the man of the moment would say, "Mind It."

Triathlon Woman

Anu Vaidyanathan can never have enough. A B.S. in computer engineering from Purdue University, Anu gave up her job at IBM to set up a consultancy firm in Bangalore. But soon enough she gave up it to pursue competing in Triathlons. For three years, Anu trained rigorously and became the first Indian to qualify for the 70.3 World Championships 2008 in Florida. She recently completed the three-day Ultraman Canada Championship, the only Indian to compete in it. The athlete is now training for the Ironman World Championship 2012.
