

By Raj Chengappa with Saurabh Shukla

Barack Hussein Obama was conscious that from the grandest capitals in the globe to the smallest village in Kenya where his father was born, the universe had tuned in to watch the first-ever black take the oath of office to the world's most powerful job. As he spoke with his characteristic eloquence, becoming possibly the first American President to mention 'Hindu' in an inaugural speech, an extraordinary chapter was being opened in world history. This was not just the usual transition of power but an event that had the capability of transforming not only America but the world too. It resonated when Obama said, "Know that America is a friend of each nation and every man, woman and child who seeks a future of peace and dignity. And that we are ready to lead once more." Ronen Sen, India's

GOOD FOR US?

What his presidency
means for India