

GOOD TIMES, BAD TIMES

History shows that Indo-US relations have gone through a roller coaster ride under different US presidents

Harry Truman
1945-1953

The Democrat regime of Harry S. Truman received Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru in 1949. Nehru tried hard to build trust but failed in his mission to boost ties.

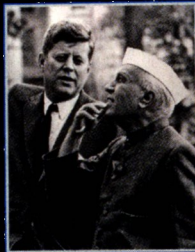

BAD FOR INDIA

D. Eisenhower
1953-1961

Indo-US relations grew and Nehru's second visit to the US in 1956 was successful. The Republican administration under Eisenhower was warm towards India.

GOOD FOR INDIA

John Kennedy
1961-1963

In 1961, the Nehru-Kennedy meeting ended in disaster. India was upset that the Democrat President didn't do enough during the 1962 war with China.

BAD FOR INDIA

L. Johnson
1963-1969

Indira Gandhi's visit in 1966 was a turning point. Johnson, the Democrat President offered food aid to India. He also helped in India's Green Revolution.

GOOD FOR INDIA

Richard Nixon
1969-1974

Nixon's visit in 1969 in the midst of the Cold War was a damp squib. The Republican President threatened to move US's seventh fleet in the 1971 war.

BAD FOR INDIA

Gerald Ford
1974-1977

Relations dipped to a low during the Republican administration of Ford following India's nuclear test in 1974. Mistrust grew during his tenure.

BAD FOR INDIA

BAD FOR INDIA

Jimmy Carter
1977-1981

India rolled out the red carpet for the Democrat. A village was named after Carter during his visit in 1977, but he refused fuel for the Tarapur atomic plant.

BAD FOR INDIA

GOOD FOR INDIA

Ronald Reagan
1981-1989

Indo-US relations warmed up during Reagan's Republican administration. Both Indira and Rajiv Gandhi built a personal chemistry with Reagan that helped ties.

GOOD FOR INDIA

H. W. Bush
1989-1993

India asserted its nuclear aspirations. Preoccupied with the Iraq war, Bush Senior, another Republican, took a dim view and ties nosedived once again.

BAD FOR INDIA

Bill Clinton
1993-2001

After India's nuclear tests in 1998, relations soured. The Democratic regime imposed sanctions on India. Clinton tried to repair ties but it was too late.

BAD FOR INDIA

George Bush
2001-2009

George Bush's Republican regime etched a truly strategic partnership. The landmark Indo-US nuclear deal was signed and ties reached a new high.

GOOD FOR INDIA

by Saurabh Shukla