

War on Terror: The Agenda For Action

JANUARY 19, 2009

The Mumbai attacks represent an unprecedented national crisis. As part of our 'Declare War on Terror' campaign, we have prepared a comprehensive agenda for action which looks at key issues that need swift reform and radical changes.

“Pakistan must strive to isolate terror elements operating on its soil and stop their export. If Pakistan continues to play this horrific game, it had better be prepared to pay for its misadventures.”

The Right Stuff

The hard-hitting truth as revealed by your magazine has served as a wake-up call for a hibernating nation ("What Should be Done," January 19, 2009). The steps outlined in the agenda have instilled a robust willpower among its people to wage a war against terror that has not only tormented its psyche but has also cast a huge silhouette of national shame. Your agenda is a positive recipe for action on all fronts.

G. Parthasarathy made a pertinent point that covert capabilities be built to inflict economic and political damage on Pakistan ("Tackling Pakistan", January 19). This, with the suggested plan to revive the intelligence agencies' operations, will constitute the most potent response to the mischief of our recalcitrant adversary. We must realise that no amount of reasoning, third-party pressure, or flexing muscles will do any good because neither is it in Pakistan's political mindset, nor is it consonant with its hydra-headed governance structure. Only determined practice of covert action as an extension of diplomacy and realpolitik will help.

Here Lies Satyam

Satyam grew at an absurd, rather unimaginable, pace ("Satyam Lies", January 19). The IT company's disgraced chief B. Ramalinga Raju will not face the music, but he will in all probability survive the odds as politicians of all hues, most of whom patronised and sheltered his wrongdoings, will come out in hordes to protect him, if need be.
