Soldiers stand guard near a barbed wire checkpoint in Srinagar as a tricoloured scrap of cloth flutters on its spikes. The recent seven-phase Assembly elections in Jammu & Kashmir were dominated by heavy security but equally by an overwhelming turnout of voters who ignored an election boycott called by separatist parties.

Kin is king in Rajasthan. Like Golma Devi, a political novice whose husband Kirori Lal Meena, a minister in the previous BJP government, had to train her to sign her name. Meena, a BJP rebel, joined the Congress just before the elections. Or Mahipal Maderna, son of Paras Ram Maderna, who had kicked up a row over ticket distribution. Maderna Sr had opposed Ashok Gehlot's chief ministerial candidature, backing off only after Mahipal was given the prized ministry of public health works and Indira Gandhi Canal. B.K. Sharma, son of Gujarat governor Nawal Kishore Sharma, has been given the transport ministry. Amamuddin Ahmad Khan alias Durrū Mian, erstwhile Nawab of Loharu whose father was once a minister, has got health and medical education. Bharat Singh, the new rural development minister, is the son of a former minister. by Rohit Parihar
