

Target India

DECEMBER 22, 2008

In the aftermath of the 26/11 Mumbai terror attacks, Pakistan's army chief General Ashfaq Parvez Kayani has clearly emerged as the man in charge. What is the general's gameplan and how does India tackle him?

“Pakistan has become the epicentre of terrorism, and India the victim of its nefarious designs. We need to fight the menace with courage and defeat Pakistan at its own game.”

Man in Charge

The army is back in action in Pakistan and its return has spelt doom for India in more than one way ("The Real Boss", December 22). The civilian government that assumed power with much fanfare has proved to be another myth, a puppet in the hands of army chief General Ashfaq Parvez Kayani. With his rise as the next power centre, the danger of civil society falling prey to the army's evil tactics is inevitable. This sudden build-up has snuffed out the last hope that people-to-people contact holds the prospect of normalising relations between India and Pakistan. H.R. Perform or Perish

In the recent state assembly elections, voters seemed to have voted for chief ministers who are people-friendly, affable, accessible and deliver through performance rather than rhetoric ("Power of the Provincial", December 22). The defeat of personalities like Ajit Jogi, Uma Bharati and Vasundhara Raje signals a change in the attitude of the people in choosing their leaders. The rule is either perform or perish.

Over the years, the voters have realised that the key to their prosperity lies in the hands of their elected representatives. So it makes sense to choose a government which will take care of their needs, not just for the time being, but also in the long run.

world with its half-hearted steps against the jihadis on its soil ("Inside Pakistan, Fear Holds the Key", December 22). India must declare Pakistan a rogue enemy nation and should sever all relations with it. India should also put diplomatic pressure on civilised nations to put a leash on anti-India activities in Pakistan because these can result in catastrophe not only for India, but the whole world.
