

DUMBEST THINGS POLITICIANS SAID

1. V.S. Achuthanandan: "If it had not been (Major) Sandeep Unnikrishnan's house, not even a dog would have glanced that way."

2. Mukhtar Abbas Naqvi: "Some women wearing lipstick and powder have taken to the streets in Mumbai and are abusing politicians spreading dissatisfaction against democracy. This is what terrorists are doing in Jammu and Kashmir."

3. A.R. Antulay: "There is more than what meets the eye. Karkare was investigating some cases in which non-Muslims were involved. Why he went to such a place instead of going to Hotel Taj or Oberoi or even Nariman House, is beyond my comprehension."

4. T.R. Baalu: "Yes, I put in a word with the petroleum minister (to save my companies from closure on the request of the 40,000 shareholders and employees) after the UPA Government was formed in 2004. What is wrong in it?"

5. Shivraj Patil: "You want Afzal Guru to be hanged. You are also asking not to hang Sarabjeet Singh. BJP wants others to be hanged. What are you doing? You say don't hang Singh and you say hang Guru here."

NEW BUZZWORDS

Pappu: Those who can't dance or rich kids.

Non-state actors: Terrorists from Pakistan.

Pie-chucker: Part-time bowlers like Yuvraj Singh.

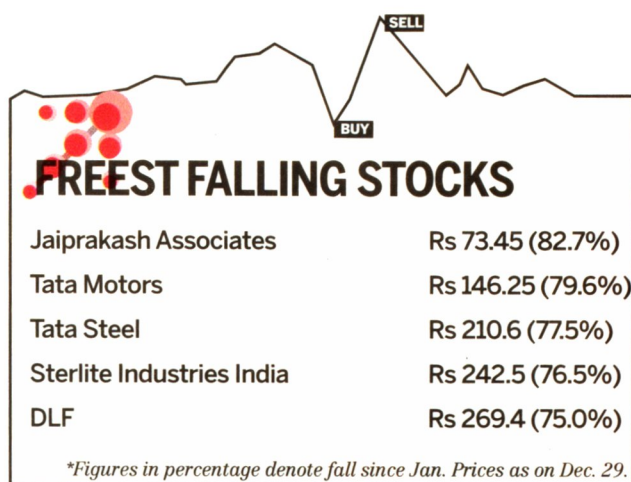

Hooking Up: A contemporary translation of saying catching up, as in with friends.

Wassup?: Popular greeting meaning what's up.

Killer: Trendy form of saying fantastic or great.

Rockstar: As in you are the best.

Hello?: Traditional greeting, now an interjection.

MOST OVERKILLED BUMPER STICKERS

THINGS THAT THANKFULLY WENT OUT OF STYLE

Cars that talk in digitised monotone while reversing.

Perilously low-slung jeans dropped below the fashion horizon.

Smoking in pubs and public places. It's a start, at least.

Flaunting black cats/commandos, especially after Mumbai.

Long locks (like Dhoni and Ishant Sharma). Close crops are in.
