Adversity and AUDACITY

| By Raj Chengappa |

For a while the ride was exhilarating for India. Especially midway through the year when it seemed that no power could come in its way. After years of dithering, Prime Minister Manmohan Singh decided to make a final push for the Indo-US nuclear deal even if it meant the fall of his Government. His gambit paid off first with the powerful Nuclear Suppliers Group voting to end India's pariah status reversing a three-decade-old policy. "Free at last," is the way a senior Indian negotiator described the decision. Then the
