say in response to Minority Affairs Minister A.R. Antulay's profane remarks ("Less Than Divine", January 5). What Antulay said was no error. It was a well-thought, malicious and vindictive statement intended to divide India on religious lines. According to Antulay, Hemant Karkare, Vijay Salaskar and Ashok Kamte were wilfully directed to Cama Hospital to be ambushed by terrorists, which is preposterous. These valiant soldiers lost their lives while leading an operation against the terrorists at the Taj and Trident hotels in Mumbai. Such callous remarks do more damage, more than that of terror strikes. They hurt the sentiments of those who have sacrificed their lives and of their families. Let's not be so thankless to the martyrs.

It is unfortunate that a Union cabinet minister has made such an irresponsible statement without going over forensic reports and other documents, including statements of eyewitnesses and the accused. He intended to create a religious divide. With persons like A.R. Antulay in Indian Cabinet, the country does not need enemies like Pakistan.

Facing the Facts

Corporate governance is very critical aspect of business and more so when it is run by a family ("Loss of Face", January 5). The Ministry of Corporate Affairs needs to ensure that the Satyam fiasco is not repeated elsewhere.

United We Stand

Do we still need a formal declaration to wage a war against terrorism ("Declare War on Terror", January 5)? Haven't we suffered enough? To begin with, we should start by eliminating evils like racial

A Time to Act

Pakistan is a hot breeding ground for terrorists. The terror camps there train and then infiltrate them from across the border to wreak havoc in the country ("Tackling Pakistan", December 22). Pakistan's hand in the recent terror attacks, which took Mumbai to ransom for 59 hours is clear proof of their involvement in such gruesome acts, but Pakistan is still defiant, denying its hand in the attacks and indifferent to India's demands for tough action against such evil forces. How long will India exercise restraint? Pakis-

BHASKAR PAUL

It's a matter of shame that a police force of over 40,000 could not stand up against the might of 10 terrorists as it lacked training and equipment to combat such attacks.

Slog Show

Government is like sex: some like it, some do not, but too much of it is likely to give more pain than pleasure. The Indian Government is becoming, in the somewhat exaggerated words of a well-known industrialist, "a sex maniac on the rampage, bent upon raping the whole country". Rapist or not, the Government is easily the biggest monopolist. Its tentacles have spread to every area. Like some monolith-creating machine, it has a finger in every pie, a foot in every door and a puppet on every string. It is India's biggest employer, landlord, exporter, trader, capitalist, socialist and go-between. It has replaced the maharajahs as the exclusive droler of patronage and learnt to create instant caste systems reminiscent of the Raj. Thirty-one years after Independence, the Government has succeeded in corroding the independence of its people.
