

afternoon when TV viewers across the country saw three BJP MPs flashing wads of currency allegedly offered to them as bribe to vote in favour of the Government during the trust vote. Days later, the sting sheet got meatier with Bharatiya Janshakti Party leader Uma Bharati grabbing the chance to emerge from political obscurity with a new sting CD "to prove that Trustgate was stage-managed by BJP to tarnish its opponents". That weekend also saw BJP coming out with "irrefutable technological evidence" of SP General Secretary Amar Singh's attempt to bribe MPs. Two days later, rivals Lalu Prasad Yadav and Ram Vilas Paswan joined Mulayam Singh Yadav to burn another CD to "show that it was BJP that had bribed the MPs". Each CD strung together a number of sting operations, convenient voiceovers and grainy visuals. And the truth seemed to slip away. The 14th Lok Sabha also witnessed the largest number of expulsions of sitting MPs. A total of 11 MPs, 10 from the Lok Sabha and one from the Rajya Sabha, were caught on camera by a private TV channel demanding money for asking questions in Parliament.

If panel discussions in television studios define leadership, a lot of the young MPs are certainly leaders of the future. Some statistics, however, burst the bubble. Mehbooba Mufti took part in 14 debates and raised nine questions. Omar Abdullah is yet to raise a question and has participated only in six debates, though as chief minister of Jammu and Kashmir now, he will have much to answer for. Rahul Gandhi took part in five debates and raised three questions, not a creditable scoresheet given his stature. While big-ticket
