Job SLASH!

Domestic slowdown and global meltdown combine to hit output, incomes and investments, forcing companies to shed for survival

By Shankkar Aiyar

He was the archetypal yuppie with an MBA, married to a part-time teacher with two kids aged seven and five studying at a fancy school in Noida, not far from his east Delhi home. His home was funded by a neat mortgage, his car was company-owned and he wore his professional pride well with his pin-striped suits. Last week, fate edited this happy family picture. He lost his job as a management executive with a large conglomerate. He's still smiling but in complete disbelief. Reality is catching up; the smile dims as he wonders how he will service his mortgage. More importantly, will he be able to keep his kids at school?
