

no room to even spread their wings

Most of India's eggs are produced in factory-like settings where animals are crammed into "battery" cages so small they can barely move. These cruel confinement systems also pose significant risks to the environment and public health.

Go to hsi.org/india to sign the pledge not to buy eggs from hens confined in battery cages. To find out more, e-mail cmirle@humanesociety.org.

HUMANE SOCIETY
INTERNATIONAL