EDUCATION

PAPPU PASSES

The number of educated MPs has shown a steady increase

Studying electoral trends, it is clear that education is becoming a factor in electoral chances. Over the last three Lok Sabha's, the number of illiterate MPs has been on the decline, with the 15th Lok Sabha having just one uneducated member, Pakodilal (below), the MP from Robertsganj in Uttar Pradesh. There are 23 MPs with doctoral degrees and 130 with postgraduate degrees.

The number of graduates in the House is 237 while 47 members have a higher secondary education. Forty-seven members have completed secondary education and only 25 have studied up to less than the secondary level.

PARTY PROFILE

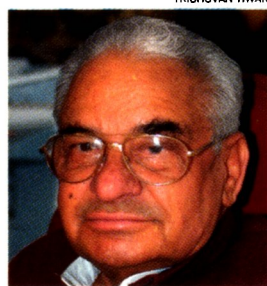

NUMBERS GAME

A larger number of parties than before but winners also include those that fielded fewer candidates and bagged one seat each

Election 2009 saw a total of 369 parties, including seven national parties, field candidates in the elections. A total of 8,070 candidates fought the elections. Winners in this year's polls are from 37 parties, according to the Election Commission. Eight parties whose candidates had won the elections last time, have drawn a blank this year. A majority of parties that failed to open their account had participated in the elections for the first time this year. At the time of the 2004 polls, there were 215 parties, including six national parties and 36 state parties. The results show that candidates from only six newly registered parties opened their account this time. They include Assam United Democratic Front (Badrudin), the Bodoland Peoples Front, the Haryana Janhit Congress (Bhajan Lal), Kerala Congress (Jose K. Mani), the Bahujan Vikash Aghadi, the Swabhiman Paksha and the Viduthalai Chiruthaigal Katchi. All these new parties have bagged one seat each.
