

Marketing Manmohan

APRIL 27, 2009

Hard-selling her prime ministerial candidate to the voters has become Sonia Gandhi's biggest challenge in these elections. For once, Manmohan Singh, an afterthought in the past, is the party's primary choice.

“Sonia Gandhi knows that neither she nor Rahul are ready for the top job, so it's better to project Manmohan Singh as the prime minister and play her cards well without any trouble.”

Hardselling a PM

Sonia Gandhi's aggressive campaign to market Manmohan Singh as prime minister would succeed only if the Congress wins sufficient numbers to lead the UPA, which is now in tatters with the allies ditching it in Bihar, Uttar Pradesh, Jharkhand and other states (“Buy One Get Two”, April 27). With states not ruled by the Congress outnumbering those ruled by the party with unreliable partners, its chances of coming back to power appear to be dim.

The very fact that Manmohan Singh still stands tall is a testimony to the fact that goodness triumphs. Clean politics and honest leaders can

Battle of Bihar

Lalu Prasad Yadav is fighting a desperate battle to save his party from being humbled by the resurgent JD(U) under Nitish Kumar (“Kitchen Instinct”, April 27). Rabri Devi cannot undo the lack of development stigma attached to Lalu and her own rule of the past. The RJD is fighting with its back to the wall and all its past omissions and commissions are catching up fast.

His Own Man

L.K. Advani is extremely convincing because he writes his own script. On the other hand, Manmohan Singh must read out a tailor-made script from 10, Janpath (“The New Avatar”, April 20). Advani has made a “new avatar” of himself, but Manmohan is repeating his role as a proxy regent while the heir apparent is systematically nurtured.
