

HUSSAIN (SECOND FROM RIGHT)

1 Nasir Hussain Director, 1931-2002

Now people think of him as Aamir Khan's chachajaan, but Nasir Hussain, who began his career with Filmistan, was the man who put the swing in Shammi Kapoor's pelvis and the twinkle in Rishi Kapoor's toes. He invented the youthful Westernised Bollywood musical with Tumsa Nahin Dekha in 1957 and perfected the formula over the next two decades with Hum Kisi Se Kum Nahin in 1977, whose echoes are to be found in films such as Dil Chahta Hai. "He was a storyteller above all with a great sense of style and music," says his grandson, actor Imran Khan.

DESAI (LEFT)

2 Mangesh Desai Re-recorder, 1923-1985

Mentor to the young, terror to the veterans, at one point, he was Bollywood's biggest star, says Reliance Entertainment chairman Amit Khanna. Filmmakers would often change the climax of films if he didn't like it. His work ranged from Satyajit Ray's Ghare Baire to Ramesh Sippy's Sholay. Cans would fly in the air, tempers would run high, but the best directors would still beat a path to the Raj Kamal Studios, wanting the very particular Desai to mix their film. His theory of organic sound influenced several directors, from Subhash Ghai to Vidhu Vinod Chopra.
