

8 Sudhendu Roy Art Director, 1921-1999

Sudhendu Roy was the only one who could work within the realism of Bimal Roy and the plushness of Yash Chopra, from Madhumati (1958) to Lamhe (1991). He was part of the team that moved with Roy, who gave him his first job as art director, to Mumbai. A self-taught Renaissance man, his greatest gifts, says his art director daughter Sharmishta, was his discipline, attention to detail and the need to honour deadlines and budgets.

9 Shama Zaidi Costume designer, 1938-

Shama Zaidi became Shyam Benegal's writer on many of his movies and an integral part of the new wave cinema of the 1970s. It began when dialogue writer Kaifi Azmi was too ill to be on the sets of Manthan (1976). "I would need some script changes and she was on the sets by virtue of being the costume designer," recalls Benegal. Later as head of the editorial group for Benegal's Bharat Ek Khoj, Zaidi would put her tremendous aesthetic sense to good use, nurturing new talent.

10 Renu Saluja Film Editor, 1952-2000

She believed film editing was the last rewrite and thought of herself as the bridge between the intention in the director's head and the recognition of what he'd made. Saluja was an inherent part of many lives, partner to Vidhu Vinod Chopra, friend to Kundan Shah, and inventor of her very own method on the Avid, the Renu Saluja path. Director Sudhir Mishra says, "There was a great exactness to everything she did. She could giggle and deliver the most stinging comment." The result Jaane Bhi Do Yaaron (1983) and Parinda (1989), among others.

dying musical traditions

From ghazals to thumris, these are hardly heard harmonies

1 Wedding Songs DJs, CDs and cassettes have replaced the traditional, fun-filled songs that the women of the house used to sing at every wedding ceremony.

2 Vrind Gaan Choir groups which used to sing patriotic songs on Doordarshan on Independence Day and Republic Day are now missing, with most musicians having either gone solo or embraced alternative professions.

3 Tappa Usually sung by camel drivers of north-west Punjab and composed in Punjabi and Pushtu, this style of singing is gradually becoming extinct due to the lack of good teachers as well as dedicated students.

4 Thumri It emerged as a classical style in the 18th century. Today, gurus rarely teach thumri because it requires a certain temperament and voice. Earlier, after a khayal recital, the singer would wind up with a thumri but this has been replaced by bhajans.

5 Chanting As compared to the times when one would wake up to the chanting of shlokas or mantras, our fast-paced lives leave little time for this form of devotion.

6 Qawwali It dates back to more than 700 years. This form of Sufi music doesn't find any takers today—even in Bollywood—forcing several qawwals to look for a living beyond.

7 Ghazal There are hardly any successors to Jagjit Singh and Ghulam Ali today as most music companies do not want to take the risk of promoting new talent.

8 Folk Music Known to be the purest form of music, the onslaught of modern entertainment has pushed this innocent form of music to the brink of extinction or worse, led it to be exploited by Bollywood (Nimbuda, nimbuda, anyone?)

9 Vaadya Vrind The symphony groups of All India Radio are nearly extinct now since most instrumentalists have either found jobs in the film world or have branched out to perform solo.

10 Lori The ringing melodies of timeless lullabies like Lala lala lori dudh mein katori, sung by Mukesh, or K.L. Saigal's So ja raj kumari so ja are no longer heard in homes.
