

8 A Wide Canvas Rise of the Young Guns

While the masters continue to be revered, the young guns have burst forth claiming their share of the international pie. Nearly a dozen young artists have broken the $1-million ceiling in the global market in recent times and the biggest name to emerge from India has been Subodh Gupta. This year, Gupta became the only non-Chinese artist whose paintings featured on the top 10 list of Asian contemporary works sold for $1.2 million at Christie's Hong Kong auction.

9 Perfect Alignment The Indian Art Summit

After 61 years of Independence, India was yet to create a common platform for art and artists. The corporate sector brought a majority of the artists' community together to launch the first India Art Summit. With the participation of most of the Indian galleries and even a few from abroad, the summit fulfilled its aim of being more than just a trade show by attracting lakhs of visitors. The only sour note was the decision by the organisers to withdraw the works of M.F. Husain from the show, fearing attacks.

10 Breaking Ground India Abroad

"Any form of international interest is good for Indian artists," observed INDIA TODAY in September 2004. The Indian art community has thus far remained a largely home-grown industry with both local buyers and sellers. The move in recent times has been to access the international market in a big way. It started with Gallery Nature Morte's participation in the renowned Art Basel show in 2006. Private galleries have already started promoting their artists abroad at art shows and international fairs. Reflecting the growing popularity of Indian Art, ARCO Madrid, one of the most prestigious international art fairs of Europe, will host India in its panorama section in 2009.
