

1 Simply Delicious

AMUL, 1967 to present

"My favourite ad character is the Amul girl because she has been around for so many years and yet there is a freshness and topicality that is appealing. It is a simple ad, but something you look forward to—seeing what the Amul girl would be up to next. The character too is very appealing, plus there is all that clever word-play on newsy issues. If Amul recognises you, you have made it."

MEENAKSHI MADHVANI, Managing Partner, Spatial Access Solutions

2 Butterfly Effect

EK TITLI ON NATIONAL UNITY, 1977

"At that time, anything that was entertaining was such a bonus. The treatment was so new and it brought nostalgia, of our mythical India that we love so much, about grandmothers and mango trees. It was funny, cute and a superb film on national integration. You put it in the middle of the Mumbai carnage and it makes sense. The tune was hummable and people talk about it even today."

Anuja Chauhan, Executive Creative Director and VP, J Walter Thompson

10

most memorable advertisements

There were those hummable tunes, witty lines and utterly adorable characters India grew up with. Say hello again to the Liril girl, Lalitaji and Ek Titli. Advertising professionals on the ads they loved

3 Rights in Your Face

LALITAJI OF SURF, 1984

"This came out at a time when I was in school and even then I took notice of it. I think it was the first time that I saw a typical portrayal of a middle class, value-conscious and slightly aggressive woman who insisted on getting the right thing. It was much like Doordarshan's crusading Rajni. The actor playing the role of Lalitaji also did a charming job."

Abhijit Avasthi, Executive Creative Director, South Asia, Ogilvy & Mather

3 Fresh and Soapy

LIRIL SOAP, 1985.

"It had the ability to make us respond, feel the waterfall and experience the freshness. Besides, the girl was wearing a bikini, which was rare at that time and even rarer today. But there was a certain innocence to it. It was sensual but not in bad taste. It was shown in cinema halls during the interval. We would be out getting popcorn, hear the jingle and then run back to watch it."

Adi Pocha, Ad filmmaker

5 Torch Song

THE FREEDOM RUN, 1988

"It was a path-finder. I had just graduated when I saw it and it moved me, as an audience and as an advertising professional. These days many celebrities are used, some properly and most of the time, not. But this fantastic use of sports personalities worked on many different levels. It sold an emotion, not a product, and seemed honest."

Sonal Dabral, Chairman, Bates David Enterprise, India

THE FREEDOM RUN AD SOLD AN EMOTION, NOT A PRODUCT, AND SEEMED HONEST.