ERICSSON'S ONE BLACK COFFEE, 1996.

"This was a concept perfect for the product and was beautifully enacted. The idea of an older man who thinks that a younger woman is attracted to him is like a dream come true. A dream that shatters soon after. And this was one of those advertisements where Ericsson took the script to other parts of the world. Usually advertisement scripts come here, but this time it travelled outward and was shot in other countries."

6 Baby, Baby...

NUDE MODELS WANTED, 1993

"This was a print advertisement by Trikaya that I saw. It was a 30 cm ad that just said, 'Nude models wanted.' It was an advertisement for baby models. Communication should arrest you and tell you what it wants and this advertisement did just that. It was attention-getting because there's just no better way to describe a baby."

7 Rich Treat

CADBURY GIRL DANCING ON CRICKET FIELD, 1993

"It was a landmark in Indian advertising as it showed that you need not make a confectionery commercial with confectionery, but can also make a commercial about a popular emotion, the kuch khaas hai hum sabhi main emotion. Before this, it would have been all about khuch khaas hai is chocolate main. The advertisement took it to a cerebral level and understood that the audience was sharp enough to appreciate an advertisement such as this one."

9 Bright White

HAPPYDENT WHITE CHEWING GUM, 2006

"It's not my favourite because I have done it but as it was an advertisement rooted in India and yet connected with the global audience. It also presented a smart face of Indian advertising in the global industry. It also met the objectives of the client. The product was a niche one, a tooth whitening gum, and after the advertisement, the response was such that the client had to install extra machines for the gum. It was an advertisement that was funny and did not take itself too seriously."

10 Story Time Folks

AIRTEL DIGITAL TV AD, 2003

"Airtel, a 1,000-pound gorilla in telecom, was making a late entry into a new category that had two strong operators. It used personalities familiar to the television audience and built a storyline around them. The opulent red armchair and Airtel's theme music binds a common perspective that this brand provides a different service."
