Some wanted to get noticed; others just happened to become catchers of the eye. Their loves, their heartbreaks, their triumphs, their disasters, their big moments and their small delights. Meet the last page's leading lights.

THE FIRST MS BUBBLY

In a blue-midi skirt, body hugging shirt and hair falling softly down her waist, Neetu Singh, the "17-year-old" star was the original bubbly girl, "friendly, amiable and unpretentious". INDIA TODAY loved her when she politely disregarded her mother's orders to pose for a photograph without make-up at the Oberoi Hotel in Delhi in 1976. And it loved her even more when she said, "Dimple has kidneys for brains" and "I don't go for pseudo directors like Satyajit Ray". Her mother's iron hand was inescapable but she accepted it with grace. "My mother won't leave me alone for a minute except with Chintu (soon-to-be-husband Rishi Kapoor) because she regards him as part of the family." Now better known as Ranbir Kapoor's mother, she remains as unaffected.

ARJIT SEN

“Dimple has kidneys for brains but she is so beautiful, you just sit there and gape.”

NEETU SINGH, ACTOR, 1976

Bobby to Kaka's Kudi

INDIA TODAY first noticed Dimple Kapadia as Rajesh Khanna's media-shy wife in 1975 who consistently refused to give interviews and whose "non-participation in films creates a greater stir than current box-office actresses working four shifts". It kept a vigil as her marriage to the fading superstar crumbled, writing in 1982 how the "footloose wife of the one-time superstar seems finally to have bid goodbye to her temperamental kaka", and as she made a comeback to films.
