

1 Rise of the Puppies 1988

What's an ideal puppy marriage? Marrying the video and asking for the bride in dowry. An ideal puppy evening? One spent between guzzles of scotch and Ghulam Ali. So said INDIA TODAY when it wrote about PUPPIES, a new social class of prosperous urban Punjabi who is young. It also coined a new term for what they eventually become, WOOPIES, well-off older Punjabis.

Puppies. Guppies. Even the Luckies. How did urban India live and love? There was a label for every occasion in the magazine.

3 The Kitten Brigade 1990

The kitty party has now become a perfumed arena of one-upmanship, said INDIA TODAY in 1990. "Whose husband travels more? Who has more tutors for her children?" It also noted, with prescience, that the sisterhood is becoming an informal trade fair.

2 Heels on Wheels 1989

While it needs a well-heeled woman to be four-wheeled, INDIA TODAY said in 1989 that the two-wheeler had become the middle-class woman's key to all the opportunities that mobility brings her.

4 The New Snobs 1993

They are the Khubsoorat Log, said INDIA TODAY, who exchange notes on Davos, fitness, the right diaper gyms for their kids, fetishes, holidays in unpronounceable places in Peru and always sport a cause and air an opinion.
