Terror Trail

Serial blasts that shook the Capital on September 13 highlight the fact that we are an impotent state ("The New Terror", September 29). We are totally inept at handling such terror strikes. We had the information as our home minister claimed later, but then what did we do to avert the strikes? Inefficient intelligence services and poor policing make the situation worse for the common man who suffers the most because often, he is the target of terrorism. We, the citizens of this country, need to be alert to be able to play a pro-active role in doing what the Government has failed to do—provide a safe and secure home and a homeland.

While the Government went an extra mile to get the Indo-US nuclear deal approved in Parliament, it did nothing to ensure safety and security of its people ("Politics of Terror", September 29). There is no political will to combat terrorism. It is an undeniable truth that Prime Minister Manmohan Singh has failed miserably and he is, no doubt, the most inefficient, incompetent and non-governing head of the Government till date.

It is agonising to learn that disabled victims of terrorist attacks are deserted to suffer ("Grim Tales", September 29). Stringent guidelines must be defined for the blast survivors, who become unfit to take care of themselves, leave alone others who are dependent on them.

The sad state of affairs indicates the abject need for professional anti-terror wings, stringent anti-terror laws and beefing up of intelligence network to combat the rising menace or else we are doomed. But as long as our politicians indulge in vote bank politics, be sure the frustration and the anguish which our battered nation is repeatedly being subjected to is here to stay. Nationalism has unfortunately taken a back seat and is shamefully at a discount, the chair and the vote at a premium.

These terrorist attacks show how our religious beliefs exploit our actions and misguide our youth. And the Government's response has remained the same: condemnation, criticism, consolation and then compensation.

Unending Misery

The fury of flood has been compounded by criminal neglect aided by fatal inaction of the Government agencies despite a series of frantic warnings resulting in human tragedy of unprecedented proportions ("Bihar's Misery", September 15). Also there is a shameless attempt to cover up and downplay the tragedy. As if it was not enough, the politicians were busy trading human misery for electoral gains.

Deal of the Deals

The NSG waiver for India has opened the doors for our entry into the civil nuclear commerce ("Free at Last", September 22). It was indeed a difficult task to convince the "naysayers" to fall in line, but we could do it with pride and without compromising even a bit on our terms. Unfortunately, while foreign countries accepted our stand on the nuke deal, two of our domestic
