Tigers on the Run

The victory of Sri Lanka Army over the Tamil Tigers would have certainly delighted Sri Lanka President Mahinda Rajapakse ("The Endgame", February 9). But the entire world community, especially India, can't overlook human rights violations and the plight of Tamils in the island country. On humanitarian grounds, India must come forward and insist on implementation of the Indo-Sri Lanka accord and an acceptable power devolution plan for the aggrieved Tamils. INDU SHANKAR,

Power Hungry

Mayawati collects crores for her birthday bash every year, spends lavishly on her statues erected across the state, but is unwilling to share a part of it to provide two square meals to millions of malnourished children dying of starvation. She surely needs to put her priorities in place to restore people's faith in her governance or else her days in power are numbered. WG. CDR. K. PREMCHANDRAN (RETD), via www.indiatoday.in

Mayawati doesn't mind spending large amounts of public money on her ostentatious lifestyle. Only if the chief minister had spent a fraction of this wasteful amount on the welfare of the poor in her state, many children would have been saved. Selfish and dishonourable politicians like her have always managed to hoodwink the nation with false promises and get elected. Her ambition to be the prime minister is

February 9). The political party in power should focus on infrastructure instead of trading charges with their rivals. Like the pathetic condition of NH-33, the 352-km stretch connecting Jamshedpur/Ranchi with Kharagpur, especially the five-km stretch near Bahargora, has become a death trap for commuters. Full of potholes and craters, the road can put the lunar surface to shame. Many cars and trucks often

Roads Blocked

The inordinate delay in completion of the Golden Quadrilateral is taking a toll on development ("Roads to Nowhere", break down here, bringing traffic along the route to a complete halt. During the monsoons, these holes get covered with water making driving risky. The Government should remember: infrastructure development is the key to prosperity and progress. ASHOK KUMAR GHOSH, via www.indiatoday.in

Cross-Fire

Janata Party president Chandra Shekhar, who has been caught in the cross-fire between the RSS and its opponents, says that those who oppose the presence of the RSS members in the party today should have done so at the time of their inclusion when the Janata Party was formed. Says Vijay Kumar Malhotra, 47, a university professor who is the president of the Delhi Janata Party: "Madhu Limaye was one of the first to demand the lifting of the ban on the RSS. Raj Narain has praised the RSS after the 1977 elections. If they are opposing us today, it is sheer opportunism." When confronted with this, Raj Narain explained: "We did not object to Jan Sangh men joining the Janata Party because we thought the RSS had changed. But they have not. We have been cheated." Narain refuses to believe that RSS is a social and cultural organisation. "They are out and out political."
