The secret to the Bachchans' riches is as open, as an ordinary filmgoer would vouch for. Now the first family of Indian Cinema, the Bachchans who were at one time close to the Nehru-Gandhi Parivar are associated with the Samajwadi Party. Jaya Bachchan, unlike a few of her peers, is more than the filmy face of Samajwadi Party. She actively attends party conclaves and holds public meetings in the hinterlands of Uttar Pradesh, the state her husband belongs to. It was Jaya's disqualification from the Rajya Sabha on the grounds of holding an office of profit—as chairperson of the Uttar Pradesh Film Development Council—which triggered a ripple effect that forced Congress President Sonia Gandhi's resignation from the Lok Sabha in 2005. Months later, both were back in Parliament after winning by-elections. And ironically today the Bachchans and the Gandhis are on the same side of the ideological divide that rules Indian politics. by Subhash Mishra
