When Vicky Roy was 10 years old, he worked at a roadside stall as a cleaner. But at 22, the photographer has won a six-month residency programme to document the reconstruction of the World Trade Center. Rehabilitated by the Salaam Balak Trust, Roy's interest in photography grew after he attended a workshop. "After my first solo show in 2007, I received a call from the Ramchander Nath Foundation for this programme," says Roy. Four rigorous rounds later, Roy was chosen by the Maybach Foundation as the only Indian to fly to New York. On his return, Roy intends to hold a second solo show called From Street to Better Life. There couldn't have been a more befitting title.

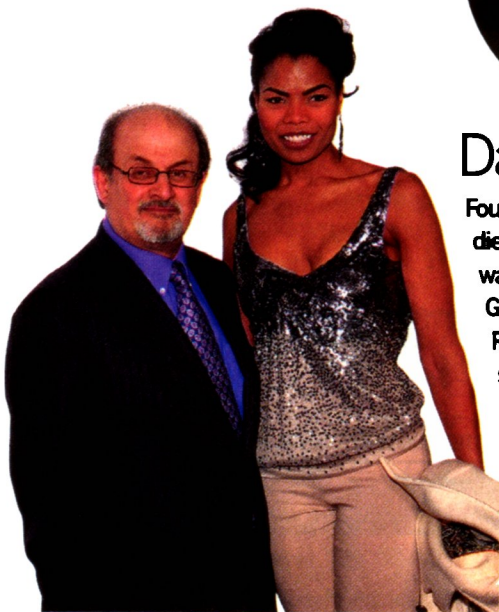

"It's a political satire, a father-daughter story between Boman Irani and me. I play Muskaan who is a strong-willed girl. She takes care of her father and becomes his support."

Dame Gain

Four-time divorced Salman Rushdie hasn't lost his touch. The author was spotted arm in arm with Pia Glenn, who plays Condoleezza Rice in Will Ferrell's Broadway show, You're Welcome, America: A Final Night With George W. Bush. Rushdie told the media, "She's unbelievably talented. A show-stopper, isn't she?" Glenn is 29 years junior to him. Younger seems to mean better for Rushdie.

FIZZING OUT

Not only is Rani Mukerji running out of luck at the box office but her endorsement line-up seems to be thinning too. First, Titan Raga and Nestle Munch dropped her as brand ambassador and now Coca-Cola has replaced her with a fresh-off-the-hit-list Genelia D'Souza as the face of Fanta. Mukerji recently moved out of her Juhu bungalow to an apartment as her astrologer said it was unlucky. Wonder if he told her the same about Thoda Pyaar Thoda Magic?
