

attitude but also the hatred and animosity he has been harbouring against his own colleague. The CEC is expected to be impartial in word and deed. In all fairness, it would be ideal for the President to impeach the CEC for the blatant exposition of his malicious behaviour. THARCIUS S. FERNANDO, via www.indiatoday.in

Medical Mishaps

Despite bringing the medical profession under the ambit of the Consumer Protection Act, its effect is minimal ("10 Most Common Medical Mistakes", February 16). This combined with reluctance of the Medical Council to exercise control over erring medical practitioners makes things miserable for the harassed patients. H.R. Knot Right

Under the Hindu Marriage Act, bigamy is a punishable offence but smart people like Haryana's former deputy chief minister Chander Mohan convert themselves to remarry and avoid the menacing law ("Text, Lies and a Videotape", February 16). Adopting Islam just for marriage is anti-Islam and such blatant misuse of religion should be prohibited by amending relevant laws. Making bigamy a cognizable and a non-bailable offence will surely act as a deterrent. MADHU AGRAWAL, via www.indiatoday.in

Hard Drive

Launching new luxury cars in the recession-hit market is indeed a logic-defying stunt ("Braking News", February 16). These new rollouts might work wonders for the automobile industry, besides keeping consumers in high spirits. SHASHANK SHEKHAR, via www.indiatoday.in

Surge Concern

Sooner or later, America will make India lend its troops for anti-terror operations in Afghanistan ("New Surge in Kabul", February 9). But in changing times, India needs to act tactfully. It would be best if India confines its intervention to reconstruction and capacity-building projects. It should avoid getting embroiled in this diplomatic turmoil.

Pride at Stake

The bureaucratic set-up in the country has always done injustice to army personnel ("Armed Stalemate", February 2). Why don't pay commissions include armed forces in their ambit? It is grave to treat these defence personnel of the

A Leader Betrayed

Erased from public memory through years of benign neglect, ignored by the party he had fathered, and incapacitated by a critical kidney ailment, Jayaprakash Narayan, 76, last week once again commanded national stage. Political leaders, who owed their present status to the ailing Loknayak, flocked to his bedside at Bombay's Jaslok Hospital where he hovered between life and death, kept alive by an array of mechanical contraptions. It was almost as if they, and in a sense the entire nation, were rediscovering JP in the moment of his greatest crisis. On March 23, at 1.10 p.m., All India Radio interrupted its regular programme to tell a stunned nation that Jayaprakash Narayan had died. History will record it as the most insensitive blunder of the Janata Government.
