

Rich Politicians

FEBRUARY 23, 2009

In a country where over 77 per cent of the people earn less than Rs 20 a day and 300 million live below the official poverty line, political entrepreneurship is a thriving business.

“ Politics is serious business today. The concept of selfless service to the nation is no longer in practice. Politics is only for those who want to make money, by hook or by crook. ”

Selfish Service

The glory of Indian political entrepreneurship as reflected in the story was an eye-opener of sorts for we, the people, who are represented in Parliament and assemblies by these rich politicians. Money power has always played an important role in politics but the situation has worsened over the years. Politics is not about serving people but all about self-service. These rich politicians are incessantly milking the state for their own good and their good times never seem to end, not any time soon.

Right's Moment

The BJP has run out of issues or else it would not have tried to swing on the theme of Ram and a new temple at the disputed site in Ayodhya (“The Party Loses the Plot”, February 23). The party doesn't have a saleable idea to help it gain lost ground before the Lok Sabha elections.

The BJP's prime minister-in-waiting L.K. Advani, who is fighting his last Lok Sabha election, is desperately hoping that his swan song would result in capturing power in Delhi, which unfortunately may not be the case. The UPA has checkmated the NDA on terrorism and inflation and has gained an upper hand which will work wonders in the elections.

23), revels in criminal activities. His animal coterie molested girls at a Mangalore pub to gain instant notoriety. Thankfully, the youth rose in clamour against the self-proclaimed moral commissar and his vice squad, the Sri Rama Sene, and taught them a befitting lesson in an equally befitting manner.

Moolah Rules

The indolent class truly believes that “if you have it, flaunt it” (“Cash Claims”, February 16). The indulgence of the rich and the famous was on show at the IPL auction. They obviously didn't mind throwing away millions in bidding for star cricketers from across the globe for their teams. It
