While three in five men approve of pornography, the proportion of those actually watching it is higher, with nearly three in four saying they have watched it. Pornithology is particularly widespread in Chennai and Delhi.

Indian women discover triple X technology usually in their 20s but make up for lost time with one in 10 wanting to star in her very own dirty movie. Say hello to the domestic sex goddess.

By Kaveree Bamzai

Take Savita Bhabhi, the big-breasted typical online Indian woman who fantasises about a visiting cousin who took her virginity, a new servant who she heard serviced a friend, a bra salesman who is very naughty, even two 18-year-old neighbourhood boys. Now transpose her into the real world. Like the data on pornography in the INDIA TODAY-AC Nielsen-ORG MARG sex survey, there are two sides to Savita Bhabhi. Is she a fantasy conjured up by very raunchy young men sitting somewhere in the Silicon Valley benched by the global recession? Or is she a composite of several real life bhabhijis, measuring life not in coffee spoons but in clicks of the remote, as she toys with her brand new household gadgets? Yes, ladies and gentleman, consider this. If television brought possibility into Savita Bhabhi's humdrum life, then the DVD player and PC have ushered in its practice.

Move over desperate housewives. It's dirty housewives instead. Say goodbye to the domestic goddess. Say hello to the domestic sex goddess, whose action station is moving from the kitchen to the bedroom. If the urban Indian man has a healthy appetite for virtual smut, apparently the Indian woman is right behind him, often at the appropriate respectful three-step distance. That 62 per cent of the men approve of pornography is not new. What is interesting is that one in five women approves of it, and more, nearly one in four watch it. What is also interesting is
